for Family-Centered, Transdisciplinary Practices in Natural Environments

Monday, June 2, 2014

9:30AM - 4:00PM

Grand Valley State University – Pew Campus

College of Health Professions

Richard M. DeVos Center

Loosemoore Auditorium

Featuring: Robin McWilliam, Ph.D., Director of the Siskin Center for Child and Family Research, The Siskin Endowed Chair of Research in Early Childhood Education, Development and Intervention

Dr. McWilliam also has an appointment as Professor of Education at the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga. He has formerly been a Professor of Pediatrics at the Vanderbilt Medical Center, a Senior Scientist at the Frank Porter Graham Child Development Institute. Dr. McWilliam's research centers on infants, toddlers, and preschoolers with and without disabilities, with a special focus on child engagement, service delivery models, and collaboration with families. He has provided consultation, training, and technical assistance across the United States and in some countries overseas on providing early intervention in natural environments. His Routines-Based Interview (RBI) is a widely used method of assessing families' needs and developing individualized family service plan (IFSP) outcomes and individualized education program (IEP) goals.

A wonderful opportunity for faculty in early childhood, infant mental health, special education, speech/language pathology, physical therapy, occupational therapy, social work, nursing, and other early intervention disciplines.
